

Drift Diving, BBQ's - Canary Divers style - and a new addition

As many of our regular readers will be aware of, Stuart (as well as being mad on diving) is mad about food. This is not to say that he over-indulges, but that he enjoys cooking and preparing food.

On 15 April 2007 we all set off to Devils Bridge for a dive and BBQ. The river Lune was relatively shallow on this day and was only able to give a max. Depth of around 6m. Undeterred we decided to undertake a few drift dives.

Regular Devil's Bridge visitors will know, there are a group of people who, at the slightest sign of sun, decide to jump off the 20ft bridge into the river. This day was no different and we had an interesting time avoiding these comedians.

The bridge in the background shows one of the few occasions when people were not jumping into the 4m depth water.

The dive was actually very good despite the distractions. We saw plenty of eels and small salmon. The eels were quite playful and seemed to see us as something to be investigated rather than feared. After our diving had been completed, we enjoyed a feast fit for a king (or queen) of not only regular BBQ food but a leg of lamb and various home-made mixed kebabs.

This photo of an inquisitive eel was taken during our dive as it examined the outside of the camera lens

Will gives birth!

Well, OK, not literally! Chauntell did all the hard work.

Canary Divers pass on their congratulations to Will and Chauntell who have recently welcomed their newest arrival, Oscar, into their family. We wish them all the best with adjusting to their new family.

2007

Holidays & Trips

Our trips are now filling up for 2007. If you are interested then please call us.

Cornwall 3 August 2007 - Almost fully booked

Farne Islands 8 Sept - places selling fast

GOZO holiday 23-30 Sept - places selling very fast